

I urge you not to change the current rule governing media ownership. Given the U.S. government's current penchant for curbing civil liberties in the face of an unsubstantiated (and most likely overexaggerated) terrorist threat, and the lack of discussion about this on the major news channels, it is more important than ever to encourage diversity in the media, not corporate consolidation. I am truly frightened by the prospect of unprofessional and sensationalist journalism (Fox News in particular) becoming more powerful than it currently is, simply because it has the money to buy more markets.
